01 motion

Motion photography focuses on capturing the energy and movement within a scene. The lines of motion tell a story and reveal patterns that often go unnoticed to the naked eye. In these images, I aim to show the beauty in the contrast between the still and the moving.

The constant movement that surrounds us is often unnoticed in our daily lives. Being aware of the movement can remind us that slowing down is just as important.

The images are taken in Copenhagen, a lively city that truly shows its beauty once you slow down and appreciate it.

symmetry portraits

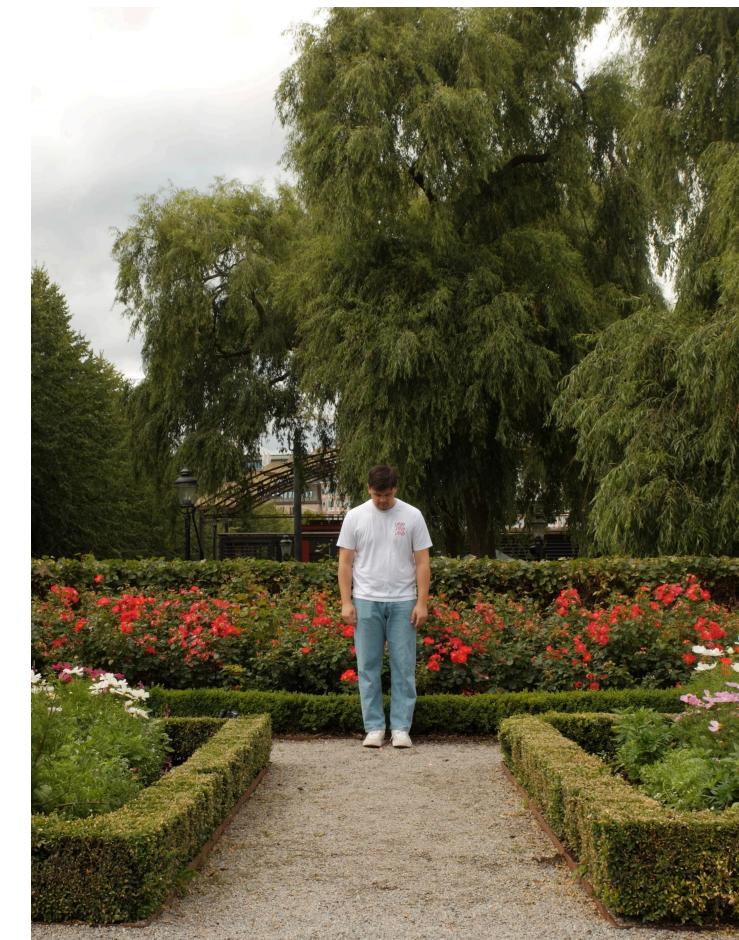

f2.5 1/480s ISO160

Symmetry is everywhere in nature and in the faces of the people we know. In this collection of portraits, I focus on the symmetry of my friends to highlight the natural balance that makes each of them unique. By carefully aligning each shot, these images show the beauty that comes from harmony and proportion.

These portraits aren't just about perfect alignment – they're about finding the balance within each person. The symmetry in their faces reflects their inner calm and the natural order that we often overlook. Placing them in locations that also show symmetry enhances the uniformity further. Through these photos, I hoped to capture the quiet beauty that symmetry brings to everyday life.

nordic architecture

Architecture has always been one of my favourite things to capture. Architecture is more than just buildings; it's the art of shaping spaces that inspire and endure. Shapes, lines and colors are just some of the things making architecture interesting, and I aim to show that through my images.

From grand historic buildings with endless of details to the sleek lines of modern design, our environment is defined of diverse forms and materials. I aim to highlight how architecture reflects the culture, creativity, and vision of those who design and inhabit these spaces.

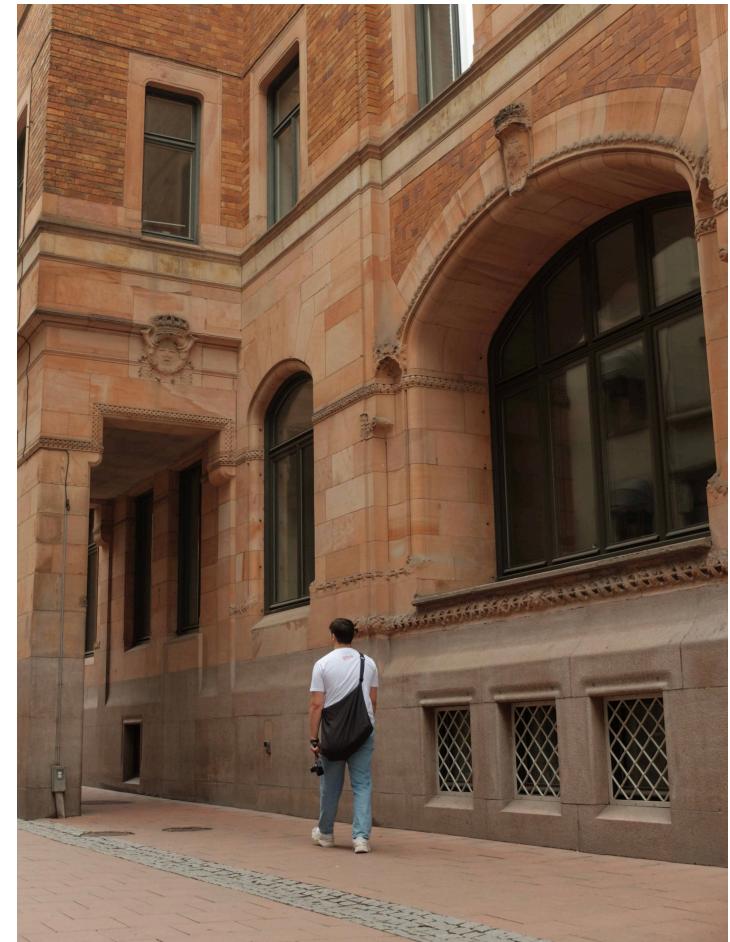

Based in Stockholm, my images showcase the structures and designs that shape my daily environment. The details captured often go unnoticed while living our everyday lives, so I hope that my photos can showcase the beauty surrounding us.

04 an observation

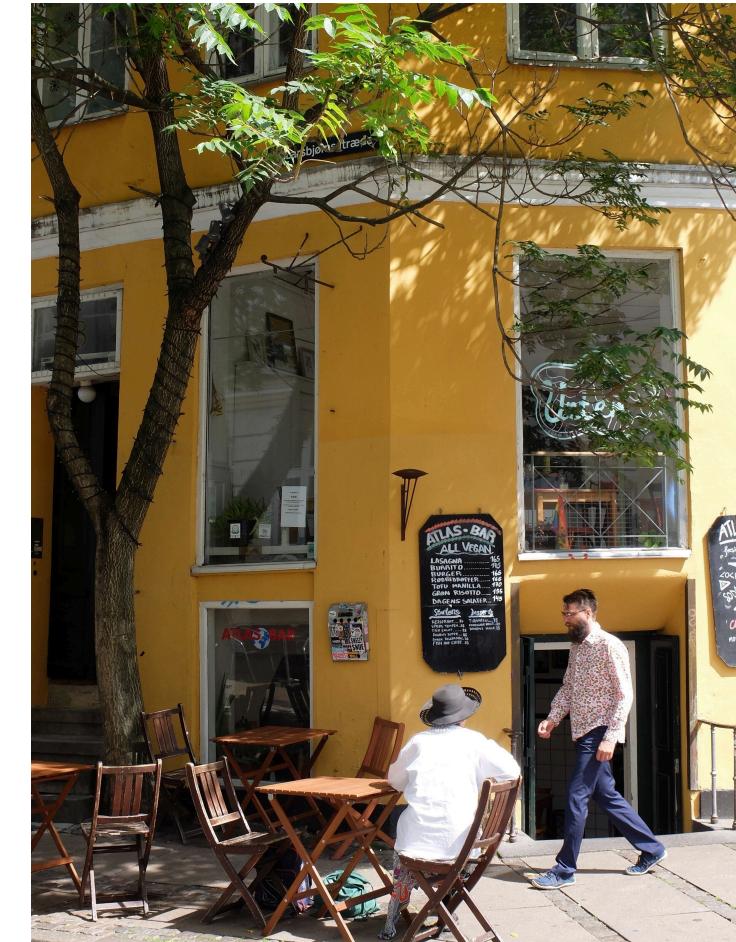

In this series, I photographed people as they went about their daily lives - unfiltered and unposed. These "fly on the wall" images show everyday moments – things we often overlook but that make life what it is.

By quietly observing, I wanted to capture people as they truly are, in unplanned, honest moments. These photos tell the story of real life, with all its small, beautiful details.

Through these images, I hope to show how much meaning there is in the ordinary, and how much beauty can be found in the simple, everyday scenes around us.
